Conclusion

- Taiwan's identity politics is a result of historical conflicts.
- Taiwanese people's public opinion about mainland China policies is driven by national and country identification.
- Relationship with Mainland China: more like friends than family.
- Rejection to unification has become a consensus.

Discussion

- Legitimacy of ROC in Taiwan
 - Is ROC the last greatest common denominator?
 - How to re-conceptualize “Taiwan independence”?
- Democratic Prejudice vs. Democratic confidence
- Future Studies:
 - Taiwanese peoples' perception about the roles of the U.S. and the rise of PRC.
 - A new battery of measurement questions for the concept of state/country identification.

Taiwanese Voters' Political Identification Profile, 2013–2014

Becoming One China or Creating a New Country?

ABSTRACT

This study summarizes critical factors that influence a voter's choice between the appellations "Taiwan" and "Republic of China," a subject that has not been systematically studied so far. When the legitimacy of "Republic of China" is considered, Taiwanese voters' political identity pattern reveals itself to be more complicated than

Measurement of State Identification

- 2013 data:
 - Some people say that our country's name is Taiwan. Do you agree?
 - Some people say that our country's name is Republic of China (Zhonghuaminguo). Do you agree?
 - Some people say that we should be proud of being a citizen of Republic of China. Do you agree?
 - Some people say that Taiwanese should establish own country. Do you agree?
 - Some people say that Hong-Kong and Shang-Hai are foreign cities. Do you agree?
- 2014 data:
 - Do you hope that one day ROC changes its name to Taiwan or Republic of Taiwan?
 - Do you hope that Taiwan and the mainland China become one country?

Measurement of National Identification

- 2013:
 - Some call themselves Taiwanese, some Chinese and some both. What about you?
- 2014:
 - Some people say they are Taiwanese, some say Chinese, and some say both. What about you?

Measurement of Unification Preference

- 2013 data:
 - If both China's and Taiwan's political system are democratic, do you like to see the unification of Taiwan and China?
 - Some people say that the two sides of the Strait ultimately will be one country. Do you agree?
- 2014 data:
 - Do you hope that Taiwan and the mainland China become one country?
